IN PARTNERSHIP WITH BLC17 –

T&L 900.42: Winning with All Students: Successful Teaching of Academic Skills Within a Cooperative Learning Environment (K-12)

This 3 credit professional development graduate course has been carefully designed to provide the theoretical base, background, principles, theory and research related to a cooperative school and classroom environment to the end that participants will not only learn the stated objectives for the course, but be well prepared to implement the program strategies related thereto. Cooperative learning models of Johnson, Kagan, Pino and Slavin will be studied, compared, analyzed and evaluated in terms of the spirit of healthy student cooperation to the end that it should have a positive effect on student achievement. The best features of each will be identified and students will develop their own model in their Plan of Action and sample Mini Unit Project. A bundle of ideas, materials, activities and strategies will be presented from which participants can fashion their own classroom program.
